The Most Reverend Bernard A. Hebda, D.D., J.C.L., J.D. Coadjutor Archbishop of Newark

he son of Bernard and Helen Clark Hebda, The Most Reverend Bernard Hebda was born Sept. 3, 1959 in Pittsburgh, Bernard Hebda attended Resurrection Elementary School in Brookline, PA, and then graduated from South Hills Catholic High School in Pittsburgh in 1977. He continued his education at Harvard University in Cambridge, MA, receiving a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1980 followed by a juris doctor degree from the Columbia University School of Law in 1983. He was admitted to the Bar of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in 1983 and worked as an associate in the law firm of Reed, Smith, Shaw and McClay.

In 1984, he enrolled at Saint Paul Seminary in Pittsburgh and pursued the required studies in philosophy at Duquesne University before being sent to North American College in Rome in 1985 where he completed his theological studies and earned his S.T.B. from the Pontifical Gregorian University in 1989.

He was ordained a deacon on April 6, 1989 at Saint Peter's Basilica in Rome by Archbishop John Quinn, and was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Donald W. Wuerl on July 1, 1989 in Saint Paul Cathedral in Pittsburgh. After his ordination, he served briefly as Parochial Vicar Pro Tem at Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary Parish in Elwood City, PA, before returning to Rome to complete his licentiate in canon law, which he received in 1991 from the Pontifical Gregorian University.

Upon returning to Pittsburgh, Fr. Hebda served in the bishop's office as Master of Ceremonies from 1990-1992, in team ministry at Prince of Peace Parish on Pittsburgh's South Side from 1992-1995, and as director of campus ministry at the Slippery Rock University Newman Center from 1995-1996. He also served on the Canonical Advisory Council, the Priest Council and the Priest Personnel Board.

In 1996, he was appointed to work in the Pontifical Council for Legislative Texts in Rome, which is responsible for the interpretation of the Church's laws, especially the Code of Canon Law. In 2003, he became the Under-secretary of the

While in Rome, he also served as an adjunct spiritual director at North American College and as a confessor for the postulants of the Missionaries of Charity (founded by Mother Teresa) and for the Sisters of that community working at a home for unwed mothers.

He was named the Fourth Bishop of the Diocese of Gaylord on Oct. 7, 2009 by Pope Benedict XVI. His Episcopal ordination and installation took place on Dec. 1, 2009. Archbishop Allen H. Vigneron was the Principal Consecrator, with Archbishop Francesco Coccopalmerio and Bishop Patrick R. Cooney as

On September 24, 2013, His Holiness, Pope Francis, named Bishop Bernard Hebda Coadjutor Archbishop of the Archdiocese of Newark.

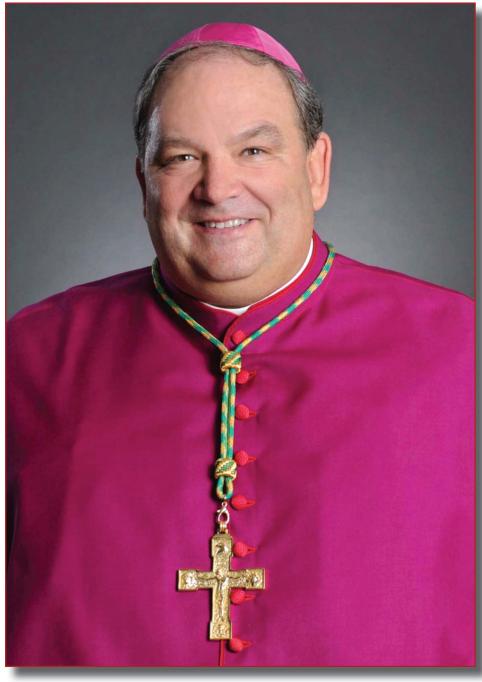

Upon his appointment to the Archdiocese of Newark, Archbishop Hebda made the following statement: "If you are wondering if I am as surprised as you are by this appointment, the answer is 'Yes'...and yet I am truly thrilled to be here to begin my service.

"I am humbled by Pope Francis' confidence in calling me to this local Church, renowned for its generous pastoral outreach to those who have come to these shores and its consistently passionate response to the call to live out the Gospel. I am also grateful to Pope Francis for providing me with the 'coadjutor's cushion,' an opportunity to experience the vitality of this local Church and its challenges before ever being placed at the helm. I hope to take advantage of this blessing to the fullest extent possible, getting to know our parishes, schools and institutions, the vibrant threads that form the fabric of this Archdiocese. I also look forward to becoming better acquainted with the clergy, Religious and laity of this Church, trusting that God will use you, your wisdom and your experience to indicate how He is calling me to serve."

Archbishop Myers referred to Archbishop Hedba as a "friend and collaborator" whom he has known for many years. "I happily look forward to our increased collaboration for the benefit of the faithful of the Archdiocese of Newark in the years ahead," Archbishop Myers said. "Welcome, Archbishop Hebda."

Why Catholic?

Welcome, Archbishop Hebda

ARISE Together in Christ

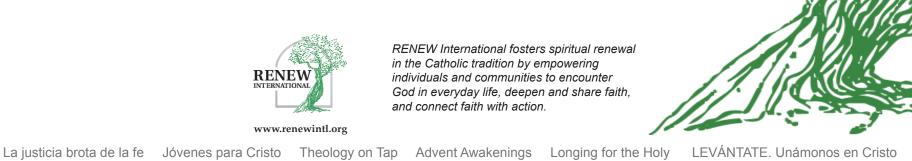

The staff of RENEW International extends warm greetings and prayers as you begin your new ministry in our Archdiocese.

May God bless you!

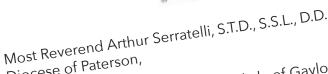

RENEW International fosters spiritual renewal in the Catholic tradition by empowering individuals and communities to encounter God in everyday life, deepen and share faith, and connect faith with action.

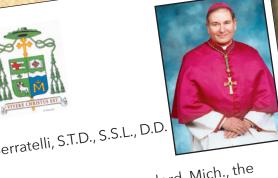

We welcome Bishop Bernard A. Hebda of Gaylord, Mich., the Diocese of Paterson, new Coadjutor Archbishop of Newark, to the Province of New Jersey. We know that he is well suited to be of great assistance in the Archdiocese of Newark and that he will give strong support to Archbishop Myers in his leadership of the Church in New Jersey.

Most Reverend David M. O'Connell, C.M. Diocese of Trenton

It is a real joy to welcome Archbishop Bernard Hebda to the Province of New Jersey as the Coadjutor Archbishop of Newark. He will be a wonderful addition to the New Jersey Catholic Conference, to the clergy, religious and faithful of Newark and to the life of the Church in our region.

Archbishop Hebda brings with him a wealth of talent and experience, both nationally and internationally, that will be of tremendous support to Archbishop John Myers as he shepherds the Archdiocese of Newark. I was fortunate to get to know him during our time together in Rome in 2010 when all new bishops consecrated that year gathered together to meet with His Holiness Pope Benedict XVI and other officials of the Roman Curia. He is blessed with a warm and gracious personality and a great sense of humor that the people of Newark will come quickly to enjoy.

Archbishop Hebda's episcopal motto "Only Jesus" provides an insight into his understanding of the primary role of a bishop in the Catholic Church: to lead his people to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Most Reverend Dennis J. Sullivan, D.D. Diocese of Camden

Dear Archbishop Hebda,

On behalf of the priests, religious and faithful of the Diocese of Camden, I would like to extend to you our prayerful best wishes as you begin your ministry to the people of the Archdiocese of Newark and to offer you a warm welcome to the Garden State.

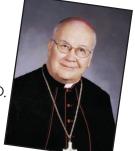

May the words of your episcopal motto "Only Jesus" continue to serve as a powerful reminder that you are called to lead the faithful to encounter Christ Himself by placing your many talents at their service.

Thank you for your generosity in serving the Lord and His Church in response to the Holy Father's call. I pray that your ministry among us will be blest and fruitful.

Most Rev. Paul G. Bootkoski, D.D. Diocese of Metuchen

We are so pleased that you are joining us here in the Province of New Jersey! We hope and pray that your tenure in the Archdiocese of Newark will be fulfilling and meaningful, and may God bless you in your

Be assured you are in our constant thoughts and prayers. Looking forward to working with you!

Most Reverend Yousif B. Habash Syriac Catholic Bishop of the Diocese of Our Lady of Deliverance

It is a cause of great joy for me to learn of the appointment of Archbishop Bernard Hebda as coadjutor to my dear brother, Archbishop John J. Myers. From its establishment by the Apostolic See and with the approval of the Synod of our Syriac Catholic Church, our diocese has always been blessed with the benevolence of the chief shepherds of the local Latin Church, the auxiliary bishops, the clergy and religious, and faithful. Archbishop Hebda and I were together three years ago in the orientation sessions for new bishops in Rome, began our acquaintance then and have become friends. I know Archbishop Myers is pleased to have him as a collaborator in his many responsibilities and plans. I feel confident that our ancient and hard pressed and immigrant Syriac Church will continue to enjoy the wise counsel and fraternal support we have always received with sincere and humble gratitude. In these challenging times, when the vision of faith can be darkened easily, may Archbishop Hebda help us as disciples to look up and see only Jesus (Mt 17:8) and follow him resolutely.

Recollections on Archbishop Bernard A. Hebda

By Cardinal Donald Wuerl Archbishop of Washington

veryone who knows
Archbishop Bernard
Hebda recognizes that he is a gifted and caring person. I first came to know him when he was initiating his seminary formation in the Diocese of Pittsburgh, where I was privileged to serve as Bishop.

It was in 1989 that I ordained Father Hebda and eventually asked him to serve as my priest secretary. In that capacity he had many responsibilities including getting me to and from events in parishes throughout the diocese and serving as Master of Ceremonies at those same programs. An added dimension to Father Hebda's ministry was his ability to find ice cream parlors with exceptional frozen custard on our drive home.

Part of the then-Father Hebda's responsibilities included helping me address the huge stack of mail that every bishop receives and that will increase now even more for him as archbishop. I always appreciated that Father Hebda was quick to see the human dimension of any issue we had to deal with. That priestly quality will, I believe, endear him to the people of the Archdiocese of Newark, just as it has to the people of the Diocese of Gaylord and, before that, to his colleagues in the Roman Curia where he served for a decade.

The appointment of Archbishop Hebda as Coadjutor in Newark is a source of joy for me for two reasons: obviously because of the gifts he will bring to his new assignment and secondly for the fraternal assistance he will provide to Archbishop John J. Myers a seminary classmate and friend with whom I share 47 years of priestly ministry and at whose episcopal consecration I was privileged to serve as a co-consecrator 26 years ago.

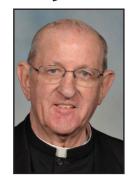

My prayer is that God will continue graciously to bless the great Archdiocese of Newark, its Archbishop and its new Coadjutor, Archbishop Hebda.

What is a coadjutor?

By Rev. Msgr. Francis R. Seymour, K.H.S. Archdiocesan Archivist or the first time in its 160 year history, the Archdiocese of Newark has been assigned a Coadjutor Archbishop by our Holy Father, Pope Francis.

While this designation is new to us, it is not so to New Jersey.
The Diocese of Trenton has had two such appointments in fairly recent years.

In 1996, Bishop John M. Smith (a former Auxiliary Bishop of Newark) became coadjutor to Bishop John C. Reiss. The following year he succeeded to the See of Trenton when Bishop

Reiss retired. Trenton received another coadjutor in 2010 when the Most Reverend David M. O'Connell, C.M., was ordained a bishop. Bishop O'Connell became the Bishop of Trenton later that year when Bishop Smith retired.

However since it is a new position in our area, it would be helpful to explain the difference between a coadjutor bishop and an auxiliary bishop. We have had auxiliary bishops in our archdiocese since 1935 when Bishop Thomas H. McLaughlin became the first. We have had auxiliary bishops longer than any other diocese in our state. Auxiliary bishops assist the Ordinary (the bishop of a diocese) in matters that he has assigned them. They are usually among his closest advisors and most often

Bishop Zubik of Pittsburgh recalls years with 'Bernie'

By Melissa McNally Editor

hen it was announced that fellow Pittsburgh "brother" Archbishop Hebda would be heading to the Archdiocese of Newark, Bishop David A. Zubik of the Diocese of Pittsburgh was confident his good friend and former colleague would be a great leader.

In his congratulatory statement, Bishop Zubik said: "'Bernie' is an outstanding servant of God's people. Brilliant, yet humble; focused, yet humorous; popular, yet pious are but a few of the adjectives anyone who knows our Bernard would describe him... I am certain that all the faithful of the Church of Pittsburgh join me in offering a hearty congratulations and sincerely prayerful best wishes to our native son, now-Archbishop Bernard A. Hebda."

Both Bishop Zubik and Archbishop Hebda worked in the office of Donald Cardinal Wuerl, who was Bishop of Pittsburgh from 1988-2006. Bishop Zubik was Administrative Secretary while Archbishop Hebda was Master of Ceremonies.

"We became very good friends," Bishop Zubik said. "Bernie is absolutely brilliant but he is always complimentary of the other person. When he leads you, he never acts as though he is better than anyone else. He loves the Church and he loves Christ (as you can tell by his episcopal motto). Pope Francis made a superb choice; Bernie is a great gift to the Archdiocese of Newark."

Although metropolitan Archdiocese of Newark is vastly different from rural Gaylord, MI, Bishop Zubik believes the new coadjutor welcomes the challenge. "Bernie is a very adaptable person and he would have been a great fit anywhere. Wherever there is a need, he fills it. He's worked everywhere from the Bishop's office, to campus ministry, to spiritual director in Rome. Each position is radically different than the one before."

Archbishop Hebda has the ability to endear himself to people, according to Bishop Zubik, because of his kindness and openness. "People are taken with his demeanor and he has a very quick wit. He puts people at ease in every situation. His humility is most attractive; he doesn't take compliments well and he never wants to take credit."

Archbishop Hebda primarily has experience in law, however Bishop Zubik describes him as a "pastor through and through." Bishop Zubik continued, "He is a terrific preacher and is very inspirational in a pubic setting. Socially, he is at ease with people and capitalizes on their gifts and talents. Although he is approachable, knowledgeable and kind, he is also a very strong leader. Bernie leads by example and invites others to tap into their skills and encourages them to get on board. He's no push-over; he is the type of leader that does not impose but invites others to follow him."

Bishop Zubik recalled Archbishop Hebda as a "very loyal friend," who was present at both his ordination as Bishop of the Diocese of Green Bay, WI, in 2003 and at his installation as Bishop of Pittsburgh in 2007. "He quietly flew in from Rome to attend my installation in Green Bay and I was very grateful. I wanted him to part of the ceremony but he wanted to 'stay in the pews.' He is self-giving and always thinking of others. "

David A. Zubik was installed as the twelfth Bishop of Pittsburgh Sept. 28, 2007. H was ordained a priest by Bishop Vincent M. Leonard May 3, 1975. He currently serves on seven committees of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops—as Chair of the Committee on Clergy, Consecrated Life and Vocations; the Committee on Domestic Justice and Human Development; the Subcommittee on the Catholic Campaign for Human Development; the Catholic Communications Campaign Subcommittee; as a Consultant to the Committee on Divine Worship, and as an alternate to both the Administrative Committee as well as the Committee on Priorities and Plans. Bishop Zubik is the fifth native son to lead the Diocese of Pittsburgh.

Archbishop Bernard A. Hebda, right, met with friend Rev. Msgr. Robert S. Meyer, pastor of SS. Peter and Paul Parish, Hoboken, following his appointment as coadjutor archbishop. Msgr. Meyer is a fellow alumnus of the Pontifical Gregorian University, Rome. "Archbishop 'Bernie' Hebda always struck me as a humble man. I say that because despite his impressive education at both Harvard and Columbia (universities), he always was down to earth and had time for his friends and others, "Msgr. Meyer wrote in a statement. "The schedule in Rome, between formal classes in Italian, seminary formation projects and daily personal items kept us all very busy. Despite those academic, formational and personal matters we faced, Bernie always had time for a smile and a genuine inquiry as to how you were doing. When you were in his presence, you knew that you mattered. His warm personality and great sense of humor made him pleasant to be around even on the most challenging of days."

Getting to know Archbishop Hebda

When did you first discern a call to the ministerial priest-hood?

I came from a very Catholic family so that it is not surprising that I considered priesthood as an option even as a young child. Moreover, the Sisters of Charity, who taught in our parish school, always encouraged the boys to think about priesthood. While still in grade school, I joined a vocations club sponsored by the Capuchin Franciscans. That certainly kept the possibility before my eyes. I loved the annual summer retreat they sponsored and even asked my parents if I could go to the Capuchins' high school seminary—but my parents thought I was too young!

Did anyone in particular influence your decision?

My family belonged to a huge parish with a pastor and three assistants. We always had excellent priests and they certainly inspired me. I also really admired the Capuchin Franciscans who worked with our vocations club. I was thrilled recently to hear from one of them, Father Bill Weithorn, O.F.M. Cap., when it was announced that I would be coming to Newark. Another great influence on me later on was our high school headmaster, Father Robert Reardon, who celebrated Mass each morning before classes began and really helped me to fall in love with Christ in the Eucharist.

always loved the synergy between faith and ethnicity in Pittsburgh and I am told I will find that in many parts of the Archdiocese."

Yet, you did not first go to the seminary but became a lawyer. Why? Then you were not long a lawyer before you decided on the seminary. What led you to change your mind?

I had thought about going to seminary directly after high school but was encouraged by the Capuchins to take advantage of the opportunity that I had to go to Harvard. While there, I studied international relations and became very interested in global social issues and began to think that perhaps the Lord was calling me to embrace a career in international civil service. It was that thought that led me to Columbia Law School. It had a great international law program and I was excited by the opportunity to be so close to the United Nations.

While at Columbia, however, I started going to daily Mass again and the excitement that I experienced at Mass once again made me think that perhaps the Lord was indeed calling me to be a priest. Having already invested myself heavily in law school I decided that I should finish the degree and take some more time to discern God's call. I very much enjoyed law school and the experiences that I had working at a law firm in the summers. When I finished school, although I still thought about priesthood, I took a job with the largest law firm in Pittsburgh. I chose Pittsburgh in part because I thought that home would be the best place to continue my discernment

I enjoyed my work at Reed Smith very much, but the question of priesthood didn't go away. I did my best to go to Mass every day but otherwise immersed myself in work. (The time at Mass was the only hour of the day I couldn't bill!). When even then the idea of seminary didn't go away, I decided that I had better resolve the matter before my investment in work would make it too difficult to walk away. I made an appointment with the diocesan vocations director and soon found myself enrolled in the pre-theology program at Saint Paul Seminary as a seminarian for the Diocese of Pittsburgh.

While smaller than Newark, Pittsburgh
is a diverse city. Can you comment on the similarities that may influence your work here?

I am excited to be in an area with many strong Catholic schools and I am hoping that I will find the same passion for parish life that I knew in the urban neighborhoods of Pittsburgh. I always loved the synergy between faith and ethnicity in Pittsburgh and I am told I will find that in many parts of the Archdiocese.

Can you explain your role as a spiritual director to the Missionaries of Charity in Rome and how it influenced your spirituality?

I was confessor for many years for the community's postulants, • offering a talk on some spiritual theme, exposing the Blessed Sacrament, hearing confessions and then offering Benediction. They always gave me more than I gave them. I was inspired by the Sisters' commitment to discerning God's call and I was challenged by their willingness to embrace a life in service to the poorest of the poor. They certainly spurred me on to greater generosity with the Lord and with those in need.

I also celebrated a weekly early morning Mass for the Sisters serving at the women's shelter that Mother Teresa and Pope John Paul II opened at the Vatican and another for the Sisters who ran a home for unwed mothers. In both instances, the Sisters inspired me by their deep respect for the dignity of human life and the cheerfulness that they always brought to their apostolate, no matter how complicated. After so many years of seeing them strive to do "small things with great love," I'm hoping some of their example has rubbed off on me.

Could you also describe your ministry at the North American College in Rome?

I cherished my time as a spiritual director for seminarians because the contact with the seminarians kept me tuned in to the optimistic enthusiasm today's young people so often bring to the faith. One can't help but be hopeful when encountering so many young men absolutely focused on discerning God's will. It also gave me the taste of pastoral life that I missed in days otherwise filled with legal research and administration.

With your experience as a campus minister, do you find young people are more or less spiritual these days?

For a whole host of reasons, we didn't have many young adults in the Diocese of Gaylord. I was really impressed, however, with the deep spirituality of the young people who went out of their way to stay involved in the Church. I travelled to World Youth Days in Madrid and Rio with young adults from the diocese and found them inspiring. I am very much looking forward to living in the midst of college students at Seton Hall.

You have attended
Catholic schools
throughout your life.
What is your take on their importance and how "Lighting the Way" in the Archdiocese of Newark can help promote that vision?

While I don't yet know all the details about "Lighting the Way," I remain convinced that Catholic education is a crucial apostolate in today's Church. While I'm grateful for my experiences at two Ivy League institutions, I know that the greatest educational influence in my life is the foundation I received from the Sisters of Charity, the Christian Brothers and the many faith-filled and dedicated lay men and women who taught me in grade school and high school. I am committed to working to maximize the number of young people who can avail themselves of that sort of Christ-centered education.

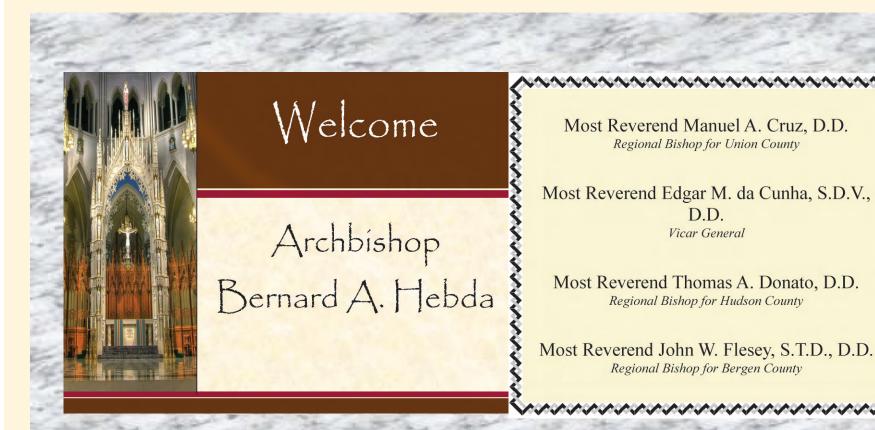

The New Energies initiative involves clergy and people of the archdiocese addressing the demographic changes within our four counties. How do you plan to reach out to those who may be uncomfortable with those changes?

First of all, I think that we have to help people keep their focus on Christ and place their trust in Him. It's so hard to engage people when they are afraid and insecure. I think that it is always important, moreover, to give people sincere reason to feel that they have been heard and that they have an important role to play in making decisions concerning how we together adapt to changing circumstances. My first parish assignment was in a neighborhood where seven parishes, mostly ethnic, were merged into one. It was awfully difficult for many of the people to let go of what they had, until we were able to convince them that we understood their difficulty and were committed to helping them adapt to the new situation.

During the press conference at the Archdiocesan Center, you said "the deepest longings of the human heart are universal and timeless." What, have you found, are those universal longings that bind us together?

As Saint Augustine prayed sixteen hundred years ago, "You have made us for yourself, O Lord, and our heart is restless until it rests in you." God created us for love and until we experience unity with Him, knowing his love and sharing his desire that we love our brothers and sisters as ourselves, we are not going to be satisfied. I think that all of us desire to be part of a family and community, to feel that we count, that we can contribute to the common good, that we can make a difference, that we're fulfilling that purpose for which God created us.

• What book are you reading now?

I'm a sucker for any novel about lawyers and am just finishing Grisham's The Racketeer. I also really like to read biographies and histories. I am presently really enjoying Stewards of the Mysteries, a history of Immaculate Conception Seminary that I received as a gift when I was in Newark.

• What is your favorite way to relax?

I love spending time with my family and friends. There is nothing more relaxing for me than a day with them at the shore—even when the weather isn't so great.

Do you have any hobbies?

I like to read and I love to visit historical sites. Northern Michigan has been great for visiting old mission churches and settlements.

God, there's nothing that I would prefer to a plate of carbonara. After 18 years in Rome, I love anything Italian.

• What kind of car do you drive?

A Mercury Mariner.

Do you need GPS?

Some parishioners

was a lifesaver on plenty of occasions.

For Midwestern bishops in Rome, tradition and topical concerns

Archbishop Hebda, along with other bishops from the Midwestern United States, visited former Pope Benedict XVI at the Vatican in February 2012. This news story was originally published by Catholic News Service (CNS) Feb. 7, 2012.

By Francis X. Rocca Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS)—Bishop Bernard A. Hebda of Gaylord, MI, said he was not sure what to expect when he made his first ad limina visit to the Vatican in early February.

Together with other members of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Region VI, which includes parts of Michigan and Ohio, Bishop Hebda—a bishop for a little more than two years—started his first full day in Rome at Mass in Saint Peter's Basilica, before the Altar of the Tomb of Saint Peter.

That Mass was a "humbling experience but a real energizing moment as well," Bishop Hebda said, "an opportunity for us to refocus what it is that we're doing, reminding us that we're part of an institution that's been passing on the teaching of Christ for 2,000 years."

The bishops' periodic visits are formally called ad limina apostolorum, which means "to the thresholds of the apostles" Peter and Paul, who were martyred in Rome. Traditionally, the visits serve as an occasion for leaders of local churches to draw inspiration as well as guidance from the center of Catholicism.

A major topic of discussion this time was the message that Pope Benedict XVI sent in his speech to another group of visiting American bishops in January.

"Radical secularism" threatens the core values of American culture, the pope warned at that time, as he called on the church in the U.S., including politicians and other laypeople, to render "public moral witness" on crucial social issues.

Archbishop Allen H. Vigneron of Detroit said that Vatican officials underscored the pope's message.

"Everybody here is very attentive, they are watching what we do to defend the liberty of the church," the archbishop said, "not just for freedom of worship, but that the church should be free to act for the common good."

That freedom, he said, has particular salience in an election year.

"We run the country, we are a democracy," Archbishop Vigneron said. "It's always about the choices we make as the electorate."

Looking ahead to this October's Synod of Bishops on the new evangelization, the bishops discussed Pope Benedict's call to present Catholicism in ways and terms compelling to contemporary society.

"The easiest group to reach is going to be the young people," said Archbishop Dennis M. Schnurr of Cincinnati. "For adults, it's going to be more challenging.

"Because of the turbulence after the Second Vatican Council, (the church) didn't do such a good job of providing a good catechetical education for two generations of our people," he said. "But that doesn't mean that they are not hungry for it."

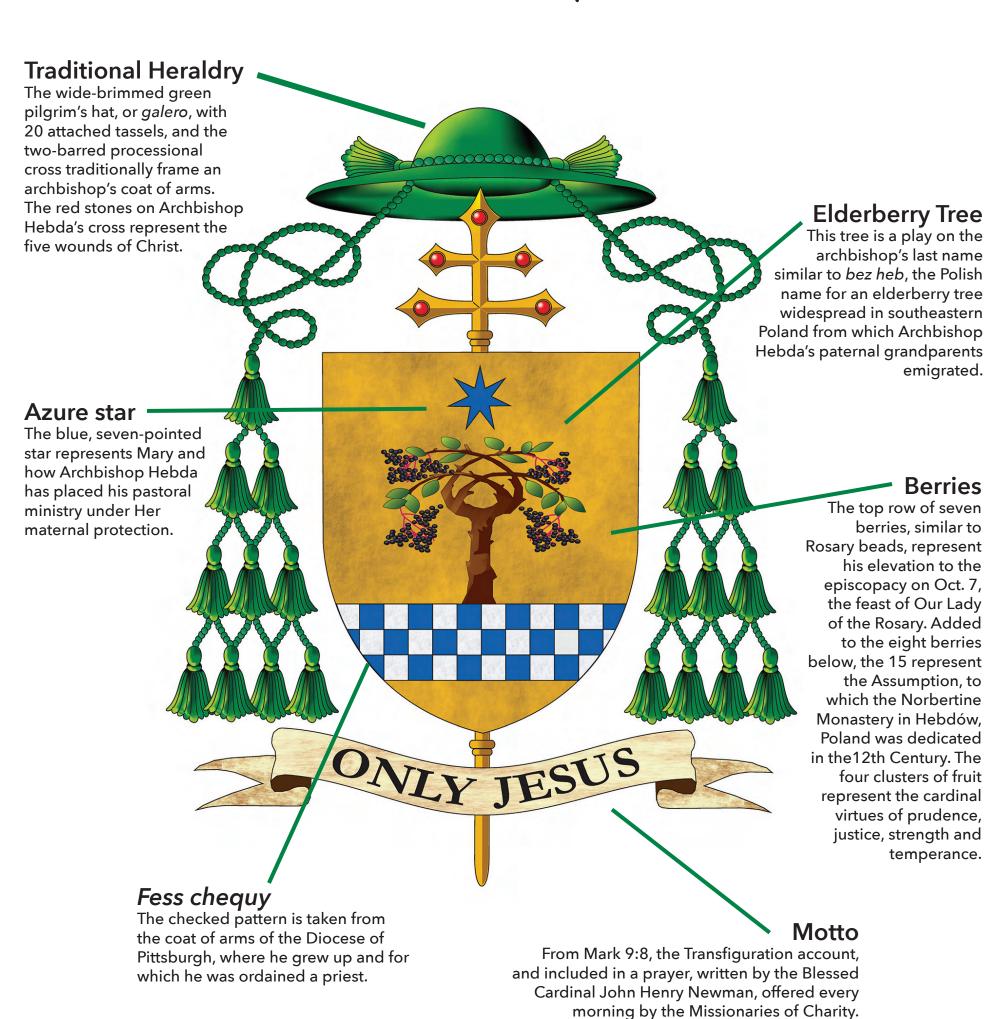

For Bishop Alexander K. Sample of Marquette, MI, "the renewal of the sacred liturgy has to go hand-in-hand with the faith formation and the catechesis that we need for the new evangelization. ... The liturgy is a vehicle, really, for the faith formation of our people."

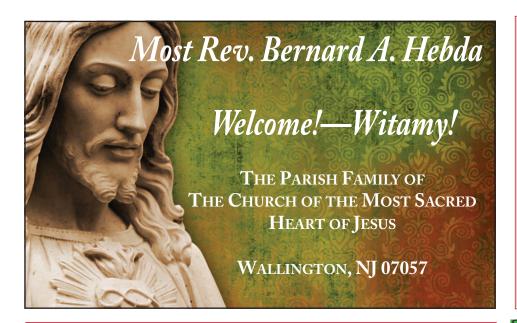

In meetings with Vatican officials, the bishops also raised local concerns. Bishop Sample said he urged the Congregation for Saints' Causes to move forward with the cause of his diocese's first bishop, Bishop Frederic Baraga, a 19th-century missionary who ministered to miners and Indians on Michigan's Upper Peninsula.

Faithful from Diocese of Gaylord reflect on former bishop

By Melissa McNally Editor

e was with them
for just four years, but Archbishop Bernard A. Hebda
won't be forgotten by the 66,000 Catholics in the rural Diocese of Gaylord, MI.

Charles Taylor, superintendent of Catholic Schools for the Diocese of Gaylord, was surprised by Archbishop Hebda's appointment but not shocked that he was chosen for the new position.

"From the first moment that we met him we all knew that he was destined to move on from Gaylord, but we hoped that he would have been here for a few years longer," Taylor explained. "Archbishop Hebda said in his farewell letter that he learned everything about what it was to be a bishop from us but I believe that we learned what it means to be a bishop from him. He is a common man who is remarkably uncommon."

Taylor described Archbishop Hebda as a "servant leader" who inspired those around him. "He has a brilliant intellect and a friendly and unassuming disposition. He has an inexhaustible work ethic, is a skilled listener and possesses a remarkable memory," he said. "He was a familiar sight at parish festivals, school fundraisers, and community events-he ate a lot of chicken dinners, got to know a lot of families, and helped a lot of communities to know Christ's love by his care and concern."

Candace Neff, director of Communications in the Diocese of Gaylord, worked closely with Archbishop Hebda. Not only a colleague, the bishop became a close friend and confidant. "We stood vigil at my mother's bedside in a hospice facility as she made the journey from this life to the next. His prayers, visits and support made an everlasting impact on my whole family. His own mother had passed a few months earlier and within a span of months, several diocesan staff members and priests experienced the grief of losing a parent. Each and every time Archbishop Hebda was by our side offering his prayers and presence. For me, he was present at the most joyful and difficult times in my life – and I shall always be grateful."

Archbishop Hebda's enduring legacy to the diocese is a "renewed enthusiasm to the Church of Gaylord, challenging us to dream bigger and reaching out in new ways," Neff explained. "His impact on the faithful of the diocese will certainly be felt for years to come."

Sister Barbara Hubeny, O.P., of the Augustine Center Retreat House in Conway, MI, viewed Archbishop Hebda as a "compassionate, sincere and prayerful man" who enthusiastically collaborated with others. The archbishop preached the Gospel by his actions, she explained, not merely through words.

"My lasting memory of Archbishop Hebda is him bowling on the streets of Harbor Springs, walking the sidewalk days of Petoskey, attending the branding of cattle in Alanson, as well as participating in every Holy Hour for vocations in each vicariate of our diocese. In my eyes, he was real," she recalled.

According to Cathy Nelson of Traverse City, MI, and member of the Diocesan Pastoral Council, working with members in the community and building relationships is a hallmark of Archbishop Hebda's leadership style.

"He listens first—that's what makes Archbishop Hebda such an effective leader. It stems from his humility. He remembers details from your conversation. When people feel valued in that way, it's the first step toward meaningful progress in any situation," Nelson explained. "Person by person, parish by parish, he had a way of making ordinary people see the importance of their work, their service and their role. He took the time to truly appreciate his surroundings. He had a knack for 'meeting people where they are' in way that always made me think of Jesus."

An extemporaneous homilist, Archbishop Hebda managed to engage faithful of all ages with his preaching. Taylor recalled a Catholic Schools Week Mass. "There were about 1,000 students and their families gathered in the gym. Bishop Hebda gave the homily, and everyone—from the tiniest preschooler to the high school senior, parents, grandparents, teachers, clergy—was listening raptly to the message. It's one thing to tailor your speaking one-on-one, but his ability to speak to that variety of people, all at once, and have it mean something to everyone? It was powerful."

Ordained by Archbishop Hebda in January, Father Chet Collins regards Archbishop Hebda as a mentor. "Archbishop Hebda is the person most responsible for my being ordained a priest. He had enough courage to allow me, at age 65, to return to the seminary and complete my studies for priesthood that I had begun over 40 years earlier. His taking a chance on me, encouraging me and being there to support me, gave me the opportunity to experience the joy of priesthood for which I will ever be grateful."

Fr. Collins described the coadjutor archbishop as a "fatherly, caring person" with an overwhelming sense of compassion. "He called me from Florida, where he was visiting family, when my mother passed away. He even took the time out of his busy schedule of Holy Week to anoint my mother on Good Friday. He is truly a 'Good Shepherd."

Katie Diller, who grew up in the Diocese of Gaylord, is now the director of Student Outreach at Saint John Catholic Church and Student Center serving Michigan State University. Now primarily working with college Catholic students, she was impressed with Archbishop Hebda's dedication to young people. "He knew many, many of the high school students in his diocese. Not only did he know their names, but he often knew where the seniors were going to college and the extracurricular activities in which they were involved. It was not uncommon for Archbishop Hebda to report to me about high school grads who were headed to Michigan State and whether I should be recruiting them for the choir or service trips or priesthood discernment group."

According to Diller, he endeared himself to the future of the Church through personal relationships with students. "This is a tremendous strength for a shepherd," she noted. His one-on-one style also included attending many of the small parish festivals in the diocese. "An encounter with him always felt like an encounter with a loving pastor," Diller said. "He always stayed around after the Mass for the hot dog roast or coffee bar, chatted with families, retirees, children and teens. Archbishop Hebda was not just 'the' bishop; he was 'our' bishop."

"By his example Archbishop Hebda has taught me to be a more compassionate pastor, not to take myself too seriously and to be open to God's plan for our lives. His humor, humility and 'down to earth' personality have really impressed me."

Younger brother: 'He's always been good at everything'

By Lisa Briggs

(Originally printed in the Nov. 28- Dec. 4, 2009 issue of The Catholic Weekly, the newspaper for the Diocese of Gaylord.)

GAYLORD— On the day after Thanksgiving Patrick and Bernice Hebda and their three children— Sophia, 9, Patrick, 6 and Helena,4— hopped on an airplane from Florida to northern Michigan for the first time.

It's a special occasion.

Patrick's older brother, Msgr. Bernard A. Hebda, will become Gaylord's newest bishop on Tuesday, Dec. 1.

"We're so excited for him-and so proud," he said. "The Catholic community in Gaylord is lucky to be gaining Bernard. He loves his work as a priest. He's an endless worker. I have no doubt he'll visit every church early on. Every Catholic is sure to feel fortunate about having him in Michigan."

Patrick and his two other siblings, Yvonne and Terry, along with their parents, Helen and Bernard, and dozens of nieces and nephews also boarded the plane. Patrick's clan is hoping for snow during their stay in the Great Lakes State.

"My kids have only seen snow once," he said. "We've never been to northern Michigan and we're definitely looking forward to it."

After he learned about his brother's assignment as Gaylord's fourth bishop, he said he scrolled the Internet to learn more about Michigan.

"We're looking forward to spending next summer in Michigan and seeing sites such as Mackinac Island, Charlevoix, Petoskey and, of course, some of the area golf courses," he said.

Patrick is six years younger than his brother. Looking up to "big brother Bernard" started early.

"Whatever he did, whatever he touched, he was good at it," said Patrick. "If Bernard wanted to become a doctor I have no doubt he'd be the best doctor around. If he'd wanted to go into politics, well,

I don't think Obama would have a job."

He also was the kind of guy who won a tennis championship at the age of 16, with some old-fashioned grit.

"Bernard was the best at everything he tried," said Patrick.
"He was quite sports minded and played tennis. But while everyone else was busy buying fancy new tennis racquets Bernard was happy using his old wooden Jack Kramer racquet. He won the city championship with that vintage racquet."

Patrick's highly regarded brother went to Harvard University as an undergraduate and then on to Columbia Law School. He remembers the day his family drove Bernard to college.

When he went away to college, I realized how sad the trip really was," he said. "I realized how much I was going to miss him. The whole family drove him up to Harvard in Massachusetts and it was hard to let him go."

This was also a time when keeping in touch was a little more complicated. This was a time before cell phones," said Patrick. "In the 1970s, people would make their calls when they knew the rates would go down. We were more careful about calling in the evening to get the cheaper rate. I remember waking all of us up on Friday nights to talk to Bernard. We were thrilled to talk to him. We talked every Friday night."

Patrick said his brother went on to become a "big time lawyer" in Pittsburgh. He joked about his brother having such a cushy job and maybe he didn't have to work.

"But then he told me his decision to become a priest," he said.
"And then I knew I'd have to work after all. No seriously, I remember the day he said he'd want to become a priest. I knew eventually he would become a bishop. Oh, his intentions were not set out to become a bishop, but he's just that kind of guy who is very talented at anything and everything he did."

There's a lot to admire about Gaylord's new bishop, but Patrick knows his brother's finest quality is something rare.

"His best trait is that he is a very humble man," he said. "When the Pittsburgh area first learned about his assignment as a bishop in Michigan, all of his older priest friends that he went to school with and everyone who knew him and even the local letters to the editor were praising him and yet he wouldn't take a compliment. He's humble like that. It's just his nature. It's definitely a gift from God."

The bishop also has the ability to unite people of all walks of life.

"Bernard has the ability to be with an ambassador one day and work with union leaders the next," he said. "He's done that kind of thing his whole life He can work in an affluent church or he can work just as well in a church in a tougher neighborhood. He knows how to blend things in ways that bring about peace."

Perhaps that is why his brother was instrumental years ago when Pittsburgh merged seven ethnic churches into one, Prince of Peace Parish.

"My brother worked with all the different nationalities—mostly Eastern European such as Polish, Slovaks and Hungarians—from these inner city churches as they were merging into one," Patrick said. "He was the one they called upon to come in and bring about peace. He was there during the transition. He can relate to the people and somehow he ends up with life-long relationships from wherever he's served. My mother still gets calls from people from all the parishes he's served at-they love him and they're calling her to check in on him."

There's no doubt in Patrick's mind that his brother will be an outstanding bishop.

"Wherever we go people come up to me and say, 'Your brother is the greatest,' or 'The things he does for others is incredible," he said. "I know my brother is very happy with his decision to become a priest and I know he's honored to become a bishop in Gaylord. He loves his work and it's obvious."

Sister: 'He's a thoughtful listener'

By Lisa Briggs

(Originally printed in the Nov. 28-Dec. 4, 2009 issue of The Catholic Weekly, the newspaper for the Diocese of Gaylord.)

GAYLORD—Yvonne Hebda's oldest brother hasn't changed much. Msgr. Bernard Hebda, the oldest of four children born to Bernard and Helen (Clark) Hebda of the Pittsburgh, PA, suburb of Brookline, still looks out for his younger sister.

"He always looked out for me," said his sister, a schoolteacher in Florida. "My friends and I always looked up to him. He was the older brother who taught us how to jump rope in first grade. He came to our recess during his lunch hour and taught my little friends and I to jump rope. He was thoughtful like that."

And her older brother, who happens to be the bishop-elect of Gaylord and will be installed as the diocese's fourth bishop on Tuesday, Dec. 1, at Saint Mary Cathedral, still likes to try his luck at pogo sticks, unicycles and skateboards.

"He's goofy like that," said Yvonne.
"Just recently one of our nieces received a pogo stick as a gift and she couldn't figure it out. I told her, 'Go see Uncle Bernard, he'll show you how to do it.' He's the kind of guy who will still try it. I don't know how many years ago it was, not that long ago, he got a skateboard out and gave it a try. I think he ended up twisting his ankle."

But, more than all of that, Msgr. Hebda has kept one singular quality throughout his lifetime.

"He somehow always has the time to listen to everybody," said Yvonne, "and he's very willing to listen to anyone who comes his way."

And that, Yvonne says, is one of the qualities she remembers and cherishes most about her brother. It's the same quality she believes will make him an outstanding bishop for the Catholic community of Gaylord.

"The Catholic believers in Gaylord will benefit from his great listening abilities," she said. "He'll listen to everyone—from secretaries to parishioners to priests—and he doesn't make quick decisions or judgments. He likes to look at the whole situation before he makes a decision. He's very fair and I'm confident he'll be a great leader for the Catholics in Gaylord."

The roots of her brother's gift of being a good listener stem from some early childhood experiences.

"Our parents were married for seven years before they had their first child," said Yvonne. "There are four of us (Bernard, Yvonne, Patrick and Terrence). Bernard was their first child. He was really wanted by the time he came along. He was the apple of their eye. In those first few years my mother dealt with some hardships and losses. Bernard was always going off with my mom to the hospital, church or some situation where my mom was helping people. My mother's father told her, 'This kid is going to be a pope or a lawyer one day. He talks to everyone and he listens, too.' It was five years until the next child would be born, and that was me. During those years Bernard and my mother grew to have a special bond and they're very close." So close, in fact, that Helen and the monsignor talk on the telephone to one another every single day.

"There is never a day that goes by that Bernard doesn't talk to our mother," said Yvonne. "They talk every single night. It could be two o'clock in the morning and they'll still talk. He's been in Italy for the past 13 years and I don't think there's been a day he's missed not talking to our mother."

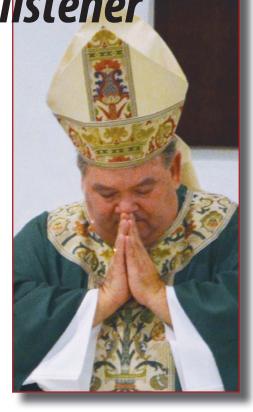

The closeness between the Hebdas and their children has always existed, she said.

"We didn't have grandparents growing up," she said. "That's what probably helped to keep us so close. We did have older people and close friends in our lives who acted as surrogate grandparents, but we were a very close-knit family. My three brothers shared a bedroom growing up and they were all very close. We're still so close. We see each other constantly."

The Hebdas were raised Catholic but in different ethnic neighborhoods in Pittsburgh.

"My parents grew up a few blocks from each other," she said. "They knew each other's families. My father is Polish and my mother is Irish and back then, in the 1930s, my mother went to the Irish Catholic school and my father went to the Polish Catholic school."

The Hebdas raised their children Catholic in Pittsburgh in the 1960s and

'70s, sending them to Catholic schools and teaching tolerance at home.

"Going to church was something we never felt forced to do," said Yvonne. "All of our friends and neighbors had the same routine. We just thought it was the way of life for everyone. Our parents were never judgmental about other people, races or religions. They were always kind and had a strong sense of fairness. They raised us to be the same way."

Their faith didn't end at the church doors either.

"I always remember gathering flowers and placing them around the Blessed Mother in May," she said. "We'd drape the flowers and a rosary around her on our dining room buffet. We thought every family did that."

They also continue the Polish tradition of sharing oplatek bread during Christmas. "We broke the bread," she said "and read the prayers as a family."

And yet her oldest brother did not immediately become a priest. Instead, he got a bachelor's degree from Harvard and then a master's and law degree from Columbia University.

"He worked at the biggest law firm in Pittsburgh at the time (Reed, Smith, Shaw and McClay)," she said. "But then he announced to us that he wanted to enter the priesthood. He tried it and it looks like he's loved it ever since. I think he received the call to his vocation early in life and I'm sure his former teachers must have sensed he had the call early on."

He was ordained on July 1, 1989, after completing his studies at the North American Pontifical College in Rome. He spent the next seven years—except for a year of graduate studies in Rome—serving in the Pittsburgh area before what was supposed to be a five-year assignment at the Vatican with the Pontifical Council for Legislative Texts that turned into 13 years.

"We kept wondering when he'd return stateside," said Yvonne. "We missed him but fortunately he was able to come home and we were able to visit him in Italy. That really helped. But through it all he's always remained close to his family. Whenever I talk to him on the telephone it's as though no time went by—there is no space between us. We're so connected."

About four years ago the Hebdas relocated to Florida. Eventually their three children decided they wanted to be near mom and dad, too. So they and all the grandchildren also settled in Florida. The whole family is only minutes apart.

"We're only miles away," said Yvonne. "I can ride my bike to my parents' house."

The monsignor's announcement of his new title and role as bishop of the Diocese of Gaylord came during one of his visits.

"It was a typical Sunday afternoon and we were all gathered at my parents little villa," Yvonne said. "The kids were all playing on the beach and the grown-ups were just talking and hanging out. We already had finished eating our meal. Bernard came over to us and told us his news about becoming a bishop. For a split second there was total silence. He could not have planned it better because all of us were there and we congratulated him and hugged him. We asked him where he would be serving a bishop. 'Well, he said, just a little ways north on Interstate 75,' he told us. Later we learned he'd be in Gaylord and we all laughed and said that's about as far north on I-75 as you can get."

The announcement came as a surprise.

"We thought he'd receive a position at a church or have a position in a diocesan office somewhere," she said.

The surprise is a pleasant one, though, and a reason for Yvonne and her mother to make some traditional Polish cuisine, such as pierogies and golumbki, to celebrate the occasion of her brother's installation as a bishop.

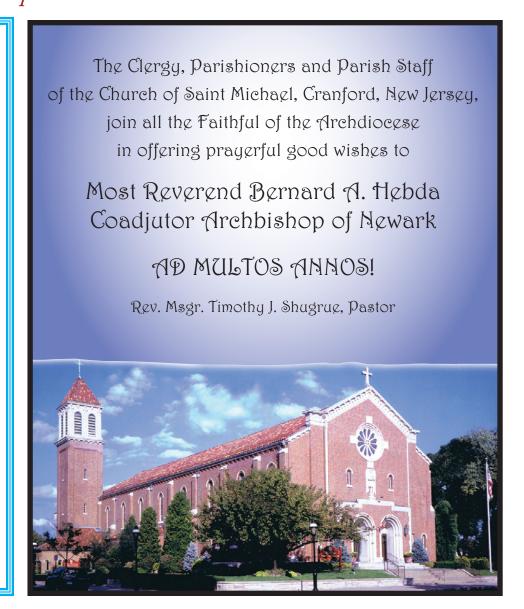

"We're delighted for him," she said, "and he's delighted to be going to Michigan to serve as a bishop."

Hebda a 'happy, humble student'

By Mark Haney

(Originally printed in the Nov. 28-Dec. 4, 2009 issue of The Catholic Weekly, the newspaper for the Diocese of Gaylord.)

Greensburg, PA—Sister Maureen O'Brien, S.C., has one vivid memory of the man who would become the fourth bishop of the Diocese of Gaylord.

"When I think of him, said Sr. Maureen, "the image that comes to me is not the image at his ordination. It is the image of a little kid, sitting in the third seat in the fourth row, always smiling, always happy and giggling."

Sr. Maureen taught Msgr. Bernard A. Hebda when he was a seventh and eighth grader at Resurrection School in Brookline and she was a fifth-year music teacher.

"I remember him well because I have to say, in my experience through 40 years of teaching, he was probably was the most brilliant student I have ever taught," she said. "He also was probably the most humble. He had a wonderful sense of humor. My memory of him is giggling; he was just so filled with joy. He was just a happy kid. Very normal, unassuming and not at all aware of his brilliance."

"And he can sing. And he can play the piano. He used to play for the class. He was very gifted. That is what I mean, he was very well rounded. He wasn't just talented in one area, he was a very well rounded young man."

He also was unabashedly ready to be a priest.

"The funny thing about Bernie, he didn't apologize for the fact that he wanted to be a priest, she said. "But he also always said he was going to be the first Polish pope. Hey, he'll be the second one."

And yet, when her top pupil went on to college and then law school first, she was not completely surprised.

"No, I wasn't surprised," she said. "In some ways I was surprised that in spite of the fact at such a young age he articulated his desire through 40 years of teaching, he

for priesthood that it didn't happen sooner. And I remember I was at Resurrection School for a reunion. it was the class of 1976 reunion. Bernie had graduated from law school and was working at the firm and I said to one of the priests, 'Do you know that young man?' And he said, 'No, but he goes to Mass every morning.' And I said to the priest, 'You know, I really think you need to talk to him because he always said he was going to be a priest.' About two months later that priest called to tell me that he had talked to Bernie and he was taking steps toward the priesthood. And the next September he entered Saint Paul Seminary in Pittsburgh."

Going to law school, she said, was something of an extension of the bishop-elect's interests.

"He always was interested in the Church and his faith," she said. "So when he chose law I wasn't surprised because in his heart he always had a passion to serve others and I'm guessing he probably thought the law was a way to reach and serve others. And then that extended into his priesthood."

That priesthood, however, was not what the new bishop expected.

"One time he said to me, shortly after he went to Rome, 'You know, Sister, all I ever wanted to be was a parish priest.' And that was all he ever really wanted to be," Sr. Maureen said. "But I said to him, 'Bernie, when you come to the priesthood with your credentials, you have to understand that they are going to ask you to be more than just a parish priest.' But he did work in a parish and the people absolutely loved him. He worked in a parish that was a merger of about four nationality parishes and they put the right person there because the people just loved him and I think he helped heal some of the wounds caused by that merger. And then he went to Slippery Rock. He loved that ministry; he loved working with young people. Everything he did—and I don't think being a master of ceremonies for a bishop is a very easy job—but he even liked that. He carried it off with a lot of grace."

Sr. Maureen, a native of Pittsburgh and a Sister of Charity of Seton Hill, knows both the man and his background very well.

"He comes from a just a wonderful family," she said. "When you meet the family you will see where Bernie came from. You'll see the same joy and humility."

"The funny thing about him is he never has lost that humility. It wasn't like you met him and he was a different person. He was always the same person, certainly more mature, but he was just always a happy, humble man."

For proof she offers a story.

"We have kept in touch pretty consistently through the years," she said. "And even though I had been communicating with him and I ran into somebody who said, 'I heard your friend became a monsignor.' I said, 'What are you talking about?' I got him on e-mail and said, 'What's the monsignor deal?' And he jotted me back, 'Oh, everybody in Rome is a monsignor.' Really, that is the way he is."

But while the monsignor really thought he'd return to the U.S. to become a pastor someplace, others knew much better. A priest Sr. Maureen knows in the Diocese of Greensburg told her "he was never going to come back a monsignor; he was going to come back a bishop. People just recognized his talents. Most of all, he'll still be a shepherd to the people. He'll just be a shepherd.

"I guess God let him develop a lot of his talents and then ultimately he is using them for the Church."

Sr. Maureen, who teaches religion at Greensburg Catholic Central High School and does vocations ministry for her order, is not surprised at the new assignment for her former pupil, but she was sure it was a surprise for Msgr. Hebda.

"Something like that would not be on his radar screen," she said. "It was on everybody else's radar screen, but not Bernie's."

She also knows enough about where her former student is going to know he will be a good fit. After all, she got her master's degree at Aquinas College in Grand Rapids and met priests of the Diocese of Gaylord while there.

"We used to call it 'the diocese of Happy God," she said. "So I told him, you're a happy bishop going to the right diocese. I think that is great."

lowa priest's ties to Archbishop Hebda

By Joanne Fox

(Originally printed in the Oct. 3, 2013 issue of The Catholic Globe, the newspaper for the Diocese of Sioux City, IA)

SIOUX CITY, IA—When Pope Francis appointed Bishop Bernard A. Hebda of Gaylord, MI, to be coadjutor archbishop of Newark, no one may have applauded louder than the vocations director for the Diocese of Sioux City, IA.

Father Brad Pelzel, diocesan vocations director, knew then-Father Hebda as one of the part-time spiritual directors of the North American College in Rome, when Fr. Pelzel was a student there.

"I say part-time because his primary responsibility was to work in the Vatican Curia as the Number 3 official at the Pontifical Council for Legislative Texts," he said.

Fr. Pelzel felt Archbishop Hebda was a good fit for the Archdiocese of Newark.

"He is an amazingly bright man, yet humble, thoughtful and caring, generous in so many ways," he said. "Bishop Hebda would be the first to offer an encouraging word or helpful insight. One adage he shared that I still remember was, 'People won't care about what you know until they know that you care."

In 1990, Archbishop Hebda earned a canon law degree; six years later he was appointed to work in the Vatican at the Pontifical Council for Legislative Texts. That is where Fr. Pelzel got to know Archbishop Hebda.

"One of my classmates, Father Matt La Chance of Tulsa, OK, was Fr. Hebda's spiritual directee and through him I came to know 'Father Bernie' quite well," Father Pelzel said.

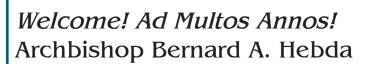

"When he was named a mon-

e age nat you ow

signor, Father Matt and I split the cost of purchasing for him a pair of purple socks to go with his new monsignor's cassock, each of us, of course, presenting him with a single sock and offering our congratulations."

Fr. Pelzel continued, "The job Father Hebda had at the Vatican was the kind of thankless, bureaucratic job I would dread, and yet he viewed it as his way to love and serve God, God's people and God's church. Always jovial, I never saw him down or depressed, no matter what happened. He's one of a number of priests that I know who I aspire to be more like."

Hebda's years in Rome

By Mark Haney

(Originally printed in the Nov. 28-Dec. 4, 2009 issue of The Catholic Weekly, the newspaper for the Diocese of Gaylord.)

GAYLORD—For more than a decade the next bishop of the Diocese of Gaylord worked at the Pontifical Council for Legislative Texts on Rome.

According to the online source, Wikipedia, the council is part of the Roman Curia. Its work consists mainly in interpreting the laws of the Church. It originally was set up by Pope John Paul II as the Interpretation of the Code of Canon Law on Jan. 2, 1984. Its name was changed to the Pontifical Council for the Interpretation of Legislative Texts in 1988 and finally to its present name in 1999.

So what, exactly, does the office do? "It is a small office," said Msgr. Bernard A. Hebda, who served there for 13 years, first as an official and eventually at undersecretary of the council for the past six years. "In the American political system we have the legislative branch, the judicial branch and the executive branch. In the Roman Catholic Church, all of those things fall to the responsibility of the Holy Father, the pope. But he delegates then, or has others who help him with those different functions. He has a number of courts to help with the judicial area. He has a number of congregations to help him with the executive function. And we would be the branch that helps him when he wants to legislate."

Unlike a government, though, the Church does not pass new laws all of the time.

"In 1983, when a new code of canon law came out, it would have been the staff for our council that would have been responsible for putting that together," said Msgr. Hebda, who will be ordained and installed as the new bishop of the Diocese of Gaylord on Tuesday, Dec. 1. "In 1990, when the code for the Eastern churches came out, the people from our office would have been involved in that also. So any time the Holy Father would want to issue any kind of legislation for the universal Church, we would be involved in that."

Unlike democratic political systems, where the different arms of a government serve as a checks and balances against each other, the pope is the authority for the Church on earth, so "When he is acting, it doesn't so much matter what Laws were there before," said Msgr. Hebda. "But we would want to inform him that this is how the law was before. This would represent a change. Is this what you would like to do?

"That would be just one function, when the Holy Father wants to issue legislation."

The pope isn't the only source of rules and laws for the Church, however, so the council gets work from other areas

"There are other legislators in the Church," Msgr. Hebda said. "In the United States, for instance, there is the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops. In almost every country there is a conference of bishops. And they are able to legislate in a number of areas, as specified in the code of canon law. But before they are able to promulgate their law, they have to send it to Rome to make sure that it is consistent with what is going on in other parts of the world and with the code of canon law. And when they would do that, ours would be the office that would review those laws, from the technical perspective-making sure they are in the right form, making sure there is no conflict with the other laws of the Church, making sure the laws are clear. We would be looking at that if the episcopal conference in Rwanda, the episcopal conference in Kazakhstan or the in the United States wanted to issue laws, before they could do that, they would submit them to the Holy See and it would be our office that would look at those.

"That is a fairly big part of our work."

And the council's legal work does not end there.

"Then the other thing we do—not to draw an analogy between the Holy See and a big corporation, but if you were at IBM or Ford or wherever, they would always have an in-house legal department," Msgr. Hebda said. "And in many ways we function as that as well. So if any of the offices of the Holy See has legal questions in canon law, we would be the office they would turn to. They might ask us to research something. They might ask us for an opinion. They might ask us to review something. So it would be looking at those kinds of matters."

Of that three-pronged workload, the biggest portion of the regular work, he added, is in advising the other offices of the Holy See and advising episcopal conferences.

"We would be responsible for reviewing the statutes (bylaws) of the episcopal conferences as well," Msgr. Hebda said. "Some years back the Holy See asked all of the conferences to review their statutes to reflect a slightly different understanding of the episcopal conference. When they did that, they created a ton of work for our office because then we had to look at the reviewed and revised statutes for all of those groups."

Though for the most part, he said, the work of the council goes unseen and unknown by most Catholics, Msgr. Hebda said serving there has been challenging.

"For the most part the work was very interesting," he said. "It is a very small office. Presently the president and vice president are both Italians, the secretary is a Spaniard, a Basque, and I am from the U.S. We have a priest from Brazil, a priest from Spain, a priest from Romania and three other canonates from Italy. So it is an international body. But it is a small office given the amount of work and the fact we have to cover the world, basically. And we work with a lot of consultors from different parts of the world."

What is a coadjutor?

represent him at episcopal ceremonies he is unable to attend.

A coadjutor bishop does all of these as well but there is one distinction he has that auxiliaries do not.
Canon 403 of the Code of Canon Law stipulates: "a coadjutor bishop does possess the right of succession." In our case, this means that when Archbishop John J. Myers leaves, Archbishop Bernard A. Hebda will automatically become the sixth Archbishop of Newark. He needs no further letter from the Pope assigning him to this See.

This was not always the case. Before the present Code of Canon Law was promulgated in 1983, coadjutors succeeded to their assigned diocese only if their letter from the Holy Father specifically stated that they were appointed "with the right of succession." Perhaps the most famous case in our country of a coadjutor being appointed without that right of succession happened in the Archdiocese of New York. In 1965, Bishop John J. Maguire was appointed Coadjutor Archbishop without the right of succession to His Eminence, Francis Cardinal Spellman. When Cardinal Spellman died two years later, Auxiliary Bishop Terence Cooke was chosen to succeed him.

While Newark itself has not had a coadjutor until now, three of its bishops have been coadjutors elsewhere. In 1880, our second bishop, Most Reverend Michael A. Corrigan, was appointed Coadjutor Archbishop of New York with the right of succession. When John Cardinal McCloskey died in 1885, Archbishop Corrigan immediately succeeded him.

Our third Archbishop, Most Reverend Peter L. Gerety, was ordained the coadjutor bishop to Bishop Daniel Feeney of Portland, ME, in 1966. Bishop Feeney died in 1969 and Archbishop Gerety automatically succeeded him. Our fifth Archbishop, Archbishop Myers, was ordained Coadjutor Bishop to Bishop Edward W. O'Rourke of Peoria, Il, in 1987. The day that Bishop O'Rourke retired three years later, Archbishop Myers became Bishop of Peoria.

All of us in the Archdiocese of Newark extend our heartiest of welcomes to Archbishop Hebda and our most sincere best wishes as we join him on this new venture in our long and distinguished history.

Thousands gather in Newark to welcome Archbishop Hebda

By Al Frank
Associate Publisher

NEWARK—Four cardinals, archbishops and bishops from six states, archdiocesan clergy, professed religious and faithful filled the Cathedral Basilica of the Sacred Heart to welcome Coadjutor Archbishop Bernard A. Hebda during a two-hour Mass on Nov 5.

"We welcome Archbishop Hebda as yet another gift from God and know that he will lead us both by his teachings and example to fuller union with the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit," Archbishop John J. Myers said in his homily.

In remarks infused with self-effacing humor and humility, Archbishop Hebda, 54, noted he had just completed the draft of a three-year, pastoral plan for the Diocese of Gaylord, MI, when he received the call from the pope's U.S. representative two months ago that he had been appointed to Newark.

"I told the Lord my plans and he not only laughed, he had moved me to a diocese that is arguably the polar opposite of Gaylord," Archbishop Hebda said, explaining that he has yet to see road signs warning of elk—common in his former rural diocese—during drives in his Ford around largely urban Bergen, Essex, Hudson and Union counties.

What he has found in abundance, he said, was profusely welcoming laity, religious and clergy, to whom he paid special tribute by adopting a phrase coined by the Holy Father.

"If Pope Francis wants to find priests and deacons who proudly wear 'the smell of their sheep,' I'm quite confident that he could find hundreds of them in our four counties, ministering in a host of languages to a variety of cultures," the archbishop said to applause. "You raise the bar high, brothers, and I look forward to working with you and learning from you."

The archbishop spoke toward the end of the Eucharistic Liturgy of Welcome, and before a public reception at the Archdiocesan Center across the street from the cathedral basilica. "It's really nice to be part of this, because it's so special," said Lourdes Rosa, 15, of Jersey City. "He could be pope one day and then we will tell people 'we met the pope," added her 10-year-old brother, Isaias.

While relaxed enough to greet family as the 30-minute procession made its way up the cathedral aisle, Archbishop Hebda was awed by his surroundings beneath soaring vaults ringed by 214 stained glass windows. At the altar rail he paused twice to wipe tears from his eyes before entering the sanctuary of one of the largest gothic cathedrals in the U.S.

After communion, as the triumphant sounds of a full-throated choir and the pipe organ receded, Archbishop Hebda said, "I can see why Archbishop Myers raves about the music at the cathedral."

He recalled how his late mother, Helen, and his father, Bernard—who was in the first pew—had been "wonderful teachers of the faith." Flanking their father with their families were brothers Terrence and Patrick and sister Yvonne, who proclaimed the first reading from Isaiah.

"I had the opportunity to speak briefly with Pope Francis a few weeks ago and asked for his advice in approaching this new assignment," Archbishop Hebda said. "His response was very simple. Enter into conversation with the people of the diocese. I intend to do that."

Archbishop Myers presided

from the marble cathedra across from where Archbishop Hebda was seated near Cardinals Daniel DiNardo, archbishop of Galveston-Houston; Timothy Dolan of New York; Edward Egan and Theodore McCarrick, respectively, retired archbishops of New York and Washington, D.C.

Archbishop Myers succeeded Cardinal McCarrick and nearby was his predecessor, Archbishop Peter L. Gerety, 101. Archbishop Carlo Vigano, Archbishop Carlo Vigano, the Apostolic Nuncio of the Holy See to the United States, read the Apostolic Letter of appointment from Pope Francis saying his years in Gaylord verified Archbishop Hebda, "can fulfill even greater responsibilities."

"You go from the state on the Great Lakes to the Garden State," the Pope said.

The other archbishops attending were Charles J. Chaput, O.F.M. Cap., of Philadelphia, and Allen Vigneron, of Detroit.

Bishops came from Michigan, Florida and Wisconsin, as well as from New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania. They were preceded in the procession by some 260 priests and 50 deacons.

Among the religious were Sisters of Charity of Seton Hill, including Archbishop Hebda's fourth grade teacher, Sister Maureen Dougherty, S.C., who later worked with him in his first assignment as a priest, Prince of Peace Parish.

"He is so welcoming, down-to-earth and human," she said. "He deflects attention from himself, because he knows God is at the center of our lives — so you're not the guy to call attention to yourself."

Archbishop John J. Myers (top right photo) celebrated the Mass and expressed his gratitude to those who work in funeral services. "You connect with families in critical times of faith with dignity and grace. We gather today to pray for each one of you," Archbishop Myers said. "We thank and honor you for the loving, gentle, kind service you offer to so many."

Bishop Edgar M. da Cunha, S.D.V., Bishop Thomas A. Donato and Bishop Manuel A. Cruz were also present at the Mass. The Knights of Columbus, top left, were the honor guard for the service. During Mass, Archbishop Myers asked attendees to pray for deceased priests and loved ones, including former director of Catholic Cemeteries Rev. Msgr. William B. Naedele, who died on March 11. "We pray for the ones who have gone before us and those who are left behind," Archbishop Myers said in his homily.

Following Mass, a reception was held at Nanina's in the Park, Belleville. At the reception, funeral directors were honored by Archbishop Myers and Andrew P. Schafer (right), executive director of Catholic Cemeteries of the Archdiocese of Newark, receiving plaques in recognition of their dedicated service. Annual collection helps religious communities address retirement shortfall

The annual Retirement Fund lack of retirement funding among for Religious collection will be held Dec. 7-8 in the Archdiocese of Newark. Now in its 26th year, the collection is coordinated by the National Religious Retirement Office (NRRO) in Washington, D.C., and benefits over 34,000 senior Catholic sisters, brothers, and religious order

Last year, the Archdiocese of Newark contributed $581,724.30 to this collection. In 2013, the Augustinian Recollects, Dominican Nuns, Marist Brothers, Order of Friars Minor Capuchin and the Sisters of Saint Dominic received financial support made possible by the Retirement Fund for Religious. Additionally, women and men religious who serve or have served in the archdiocese but whose communities are based elsewhere may benefit from the annual appeal.

Catholic bishops of the United States initiated the collection in 1988 to address the significant U.S. religious communities. Proceeds are distributed to eligible communities to help underwrite retirement and health-care expenses. Since the collection began, Catholics have contributed $698 million. Over 93 percent of donations directly support senior religious and their communities.

'I am deeply grateful to the Catholics across the nation who faithfully support the Retirement Fund for Religious," said Pre-cious Blood Sister Janice Bader, NRRO's executive director. "Their generosity allows our office to provide vital financial assistance to hundreds of religious communities each year.'

Despite the generosity to the collection, numerous religious communities struggle to provide adequate care. In the past, Catholic sisters, brothers, and religious order priests—known collectively as women and men religious served for small stipends that did not include retirement benefits.

Their sacrifices now leave their religious communities without adequate savings for retirement. Of 548 communities submitting data to the NRRO in 2012, only eight percent were fully funded for retirement.

At the same time, the number of religious needing care is on the rise. In 2012, 61 percent of the religious communities providing data to the NRRO had a median age of 75 or older. Accompanying the higher median age is a decrease in the number of religious able to serve in compensated ministry. By 2023, the NRRO projects that retired religious will outnumber wage-earning religious by four to one.

'As the number of wage-earning religious drops, so does income," said Sister Bader. "Our mission is to help religious communities prepare for the dramatic income reduction that will accompany this demographic shift."

Unitatis redintegratio was passed by a vote of 2,137 to 11 of the bishops assembled and was promulgated by Pope Paul VI on Nov. 21, 1964. The title in Latin means "Restoration of Unity" and is from the first line of the decree, as is customary with major Catholic documents. Especially after the promulgation of the Decree an Ecumenism, the Catholic Church, while fostering ecumenical renewal within itself, began to engage in contacts and dialogues with other churches and communions and with the World Council of Churches, which continue to produce many important results fostering unity and reconciliation of long divided Christians. The keynote address, "The Impact of the Decree on Ecumenism on the life of the Catholic Church" will be presented by Rev. Dr. John Crossin,

O.S.F.S., executive director, Secretariat for Ecumenical and Interreligious Affairs, United States Conference of Catholic Bishops.
